

SPECKLED

Remembering Princess Diana

It was the stuff of fairy tales...

Commoner marries Prince and they live happily ever after, except that she was no commoner, he was the Playboy Prince, and as for happily ever after...

Diana Spencer first met Charles when she was sixteen. He was dating her sister Sarah. Three years later she was invited to spend the weekend galloping over the moss covered moors of Balmoral, the Scottish castle of the British royal family. Over dinner whilst sitting across the table from Charles, the pair re-counted yachting hijinks. Charles thought Diana's sense of humour was wicked and so promptly invited her to go fishing with him the next morning. Peeking out shyly from under her glossy fringe and decked out in corduroy culottes and sweatshirt, she proved to be irresistible. The prince proposed 6 months later in the nursery of Windsor Castle (expectations setting precedence over romance early on). On July 29, 1981, Diana walked down the aisle of St. Paul's Cathedral in a puffy sleeved ivory dress with hand embroidered sequins, 10,000 pearls and reams of voluminous silk taffeta. 750 million people tuned in to watch her raise the bar for Princesses everywhere.

Five extra wedding dresses were made, 27 cakes were baked, 30 choirboys sang, and even a chef was appointed to inspect every single cherry, currant, raisin and sultana that was to go into the wedding cake for perfect plumpness. It was to be nothing short of flawless.

.The newly weds honeymooned for three months, during which time Diana became pregnant. She described the honeymoon as "fabulous" and said she "could highly recommend marriage." It was also the time when she started to suspect the true nature of Charles and Camilla Parkes Bowles' friendship. She soon found herself in a companion-less marriage to a man who preferred polo and pruning. The Queen banned Camilla from Buckingham Palace and formal royal functions, but Charles simply wouldn't give her up.

“ Being a princess isn't all it's cracked up to be. ”

The press initially presented Diana as the young wife in love, but it wasn't long before the focus turned to gossip and speculation about her private life. This fodder sold magazines and tabloids for many, many years. Diana was then the most photographed woman in the world. She set fashion trends when she wore pearls, polka dots, shoulder pads and taffeta, and single handedly pioneered the polka dot dress with white stockings combo. The royals were quickly being eclipsed by her beauty and grace as the crowds cheered and flashbulbs popped mostly for her. All the while she gazed out demurely from under her signature swept up hair do. But she was so much more than just polka dots and polo. Diana used her high profile role as Princess to bring awareness to more than one hundred charities. She highlighted hunger in impoverished countries, and touched those that society deemed untouchable: those living with AIDS and leprosy. Many remember her campaigning hard for the eradication of land mines. Even then, in her bullet proof vest, cream chinos and crisp white shirt, she was on point for elegance.

After four years of separation, Charles and Diana finally divorced in 1996. She stepped out of the public life and parred down her commitments to humanitarian causes. She purged her closets of the past. Out went the frou frou and in came a more minimal look. Hems were raised and heels were back! Sadly she wasn't able to enjoy her single life for long, as at the age of thirty six she died in a tragic car accident in Paris. The world was saddened that just as she was emerging with a fresh start, her life was cut short.

Her legacy lives on through her two sons William and Harry, who remember her in their daily lives and pay tribute to her in many ways.

Even the Queen commissioned an artist to decorate a hallway at Kensington Palace with floor to ceiling wallpaper depicting iconic moments from Diana's life.

The wallpaper consists of bold and colourful watercolour paintings illustrating Diana's changing wardrobe reflecting her life's changing journey. A fitting modern tribute for a modern Princess.

Remembering Princess Diana

REMINISCENCE QUESTIONS

The Princess Diana craft activity can be used in aged care for reminiscence crafts with residents. Reminiscing refers to casting ones mind back to times gone by and feeling nostalgic about those experiences. It is often a happy activity enjoyed by anyone at any age. It encourages communication and can strengthen bonds between people. Here are a few questions to assist the stroll down memory lane.

When Diana was a teenager, she had a picture of Prince Charles tacked above her bed at boarding school. Who were your teen idols growing up?

(A few names from the 60's: Tony Curtis, James Dean, Elvis Presley.

From the 70's: David Cassidy, John Travolta, Michael Caine, Sean Connery)

Did you tune in to watch the Royal wedding? What did you think of all the pomp and ceremony?

The Queen first visited Australia in 1954. She has been back 16 times since.

Have you ever gone to see the Queen?

Do you remember buying weekly tabloids, like Women's Weekly and Women's Day and reading about the royal family?

Do you remember where you were or what you were doing when you heard the news of Diana's death?

DIANA HER FASHION STORY

Looking back over the years at Diana's changing fashion style.

MAY 1981

Diana and Charles went to Balmoral, Scotland for a little break before their big wedding day. She wears a bright woollen jumper, corduroy pants and Wellington boots.

APRIL 1983

Diana wore a black and white ensemble when she attended a garden party at Government House in Auckland, New Zealand.

MAY 1986

Diana in Japan, honouring her guests by wearing a dress with red dots representing the rising sun.

JANUARY 1988

Diana greeting crowds at Bayview after attending St. Andrew's Cathedral in Australia.

1991

Diana in Versace for Harpers Bazaar.

SEPTEMBER 1995

Diana in Paris, France.

OCTOBER 1996

Diana attends Victor Chang
Cardiac Research Institute
Fundraising Dinner, Sydney, Australia.

AUGUST 1997

Diana visits Bosnia to campaign for the eradication of land mines.